

City of Cochran holds its annual Lite-A-Lite event

By CAROLINE WEATHERSBY
Staff Reporter

On Dec. 12, Cochran held its annual Lite-a-Lite tree lighting ceremony and parade in downtown.

The event is hosted every year by the Pilot Club of Cochran dating back to 1977. The Lite-a-Lite project, which coincides with the annual lighting of the town Christmas tree, encourages members of the public to donate $1 to claim a light in honor of a loved one. Funds are collected and directed towards local scholarships for Bleckley County High School students.

During the event, Mayor Billy Yeomans gave a quick speech in front of the city auditorium, encouraging everyone to, as the tree is lit, remember the people who give those lights meaning.

"Every light on that tree represents some person. It's not just a light, it's a person, so think about that," he said.

Yeomans then turned the crowd over to the Bleckley County Elementary School Chorus, who sang four songs for attendees including "Deck the Halls," "Silent Night," "O Christmas Tree" and "We Wish You a Merry Christmas."

Then, after an enthusiastic countdown, the tree was lit.

Following the tree-lighting was the parade. City and county officials, local businesses, churches, and first responders participated by driving around town in various cars, trucks, floats and even a plane - decked out in all the best Christmas lights and decor Cochran has to offer.

After the parade, the City of Cochran presented awards to three parade goers for their craftsmanship and presentation:

Most Festive - La Cabaña
Judges' Choice - Citizens Bank of Cochran
Best Overall - Cochran Airport

After the event, a city representative took to social media, writing, "The City of Cochran would like to extend a heartfelt thank you to everyone who participated in and attended our Christmas Parade. Your creativity, holiday spirit, and community pride truly made the evening special!"

Between the tree lighting and parade events, the community band performed in front of the county courthouse.

The BCES Chorus sang four songs before the Christmas tree was lit, including popular tunes like "Deck the Halls," "Silent Night," "O Christmas Tree," and "We Wish You a Merry Christmas." The community band performed in front of the county courthouse, between the tree lighting event and the parade. The City of Cochran crowned three winners at its annual Christmas parade. La Cabana won Most Festive, Judges' Choice was Citizens Bank of Cochran, and the Best Overall was awarded to the Cochran Airport/Photos by Caroline Weathersby, Special Photos contributed by the City of Cochran

"We are a very dog-friendly business, and we have dogs in and out of here all the time. So, we thought this even made sense."

Ollie the Bulldog was a natural, stepping right up to the bow-themed backdrop and sticking his head through the hole. Ollie made sure the photographer got all of his best angles.

Ollie would've been perfectly happy standing there all day posing for pics. Some of the other dogs, however, had better things to do and they weren't exactly feeling it. Several of the chihuahuas, for example, needed coaxing and coercing. In defense of the chihuahuas, it wasn't completely their fault, as their legs were too short and they needed help being propped up.

"We can't wait to do more," Asbell said. "We're already planning more dog events for 2026."

Cochran-Bleckley Chamber of Commerce sold more than $40,000 in Bleckley Bucks

By CAROLINE WEATHERSBY
Staff Reporter

The Cochran-Bleckley Chamber of Commerce has sold over $40,000 in Bleckley Bucks during the month of December, Chamber President Melissa Barker announced at a county commissioner meeting last week.

Bleckley Bucks is a shop local program designed to boost Cochran businesses and "keep money in the community," said Barker.

This program allows consumers to buy Bleckley Bucks in the form of a check in increments of $10 and $25, which can then be spent at more than one hundred participating businesses throughout the Bleckley area. The Bleckley Buck is a direct 1-to-1 conversion of the U.S. dollar.

"When you can spend [Bleckley Bucks] at over a hundred businesses and keep money in Cochran, we are literally feeding our community," said Barker.

Interested residents purchase the currency at the Chamber of Commerce and can use it at a number of participating shops, restaurants, and more throughout the county. Some of these businesses include Middle Georgia State University, Scott's BBQ, the Mule Barn, Dykes Pharmacy, At Home Senior Living, Curry Heating & Air, KMAD Academy, ASAP Septic, Cochran Motor Speedway, Orchard Vet Clinic and Greene Acres Farm.

A full list of participating businesses can be found on the official Cochran-Bleckley Chamber of Commerce webpage.

Though they're sold year-round, Bleckley Bucks are often given as gifts during the holiday season.

This year, the chamber will gift $100 in Bleckley

Bucks to the winner of the Chandler the Chamber Elf drawing.

Chandler, the chamber's mischievous Elf on the Shelf that appears every year during the Christmas season, visited over a dozen businesses throughout the month of December. Residents who found and took photos with Chandler were encouraged to post to social media tagging both the chamber and the business where Chandler was found, and they would be entered into the drawing.

The drawing was held Monday, Dec. 22.

OFTC students put teaching skills into practice

SPECIAL TO TIMES JOURNAL POST

Early Childhood Care & Education students at Oconee Fall Line Technical College (OFTC) recently showcased hands-on learning activities they designed for preschool-aged children as part of their program coursework.

The students created interactive bulletin boards, sensory learning centers, literacy and math stations, and social-emotional development activities—mirroring the types of experiences early childhood educators provide in real classrooms. These projects allow OFTC students to practice planning lessons, creating age-appropriate materials, and leading group activities while gaining a deeper understanding of how young children learn through play and exploration.

OFTC's Early Childhood Care & Education program prepares graduates to work in preschools, child care centers, Head Start programs, and other early learning environments. Through hands-on assignments like these, students build the confidence and skills needed to support children's growth across cognitive, social-emotional, language, and physical development.

The 130-page guide is packed full of beautiful imagery and immersive storytelling designed to inspire exploration across all regions of Georgia as travelers and communities across the state plan for the FIFA World Cup 2026. Travelers can request a free mailed copy of the travel guide online or pick up a copy at one of the state’s nine Visitor Information Centers.

“Georgia is excited to welcome a historic number of visitors from around the world this year as we host the FIFA World Cup 2026 and celebrate America’s 250th birthday,” said Governor Brian Kemp. “As a record number of travelers choose to spend time in Georgia, this travel guide will provide them a glimpse into the people and places that make this state so great. Whether the Peach State is their destination or they are just passing through, we hope this resource inspires our visitors to keep Georgia on their mind as they learn about everything we have to offer.”

The guide’s four-tab cover showcases the diverse landscapes and experiences drawing travelers to Georgia, from immersing in the vibrant energy of a FIFA World Cup 2026 Host City to experiencing the small town that shaped a president, and exploring Colonial history along the coast to picturesque golfing in the mountains. “With the global spotlight on Georgia in 2026, this moment gives us a unique opportunity to bring visitors from nearby and around the globe into cities and towns across Georgia and invite them to ‘Make Yourself at Home.’ Hospitality, natural beauty, and a welcoming atmosphere define every corner of our state, and our new travel guide will convey that message to all of our guests,” said Georgia Department of Economic Development Commissioner Pat Wilson. “That’s because every visit to Georgia counts, supporting our hospitality workforce and sustaining the businesses that power our local communities.”

Throughout the guide, travelers will find trip-planning tools and tips, including a wide range of itineraries, a foldout state map, transportation and accessibility information, and spotlights on locally grown and made products that visitors can take home as a gift or memento of their time in Georgia. nomics Development Deputy Commissioner of Tourism Jay Markwalter. “Thanks to the leadership of Governor Kemp and our General Assembly, as well as the effectiveness of our statewide tourism industry and visitor-driven marketing strategies like this travel guide, Georgia’s visitor economy is stronger than ever. This guide will further our mission to inspire visitation and spending across all regions of Georgia.”

Following three straight years of record-breaking tourism, this inspirational planner aims to continue Georgia’s upward momentum. In 2024, the state welcomed a new high of 174.2 million visitors, resulting in a record $45.2 billion in visitor spending. Those tourism dollars generated $82 billion in statewide economic impact and supported 470,570 jobs.

Fulton DA Fani Willis testified to Georgia Senate committee

By TY TAGAMI
Capitol Beat News Service

ATLANTA — After more than a year of rebuffing Republican attempts to compel her testimony before the Georgia Senate, Fani Willis went to the state Capitol Wednesday to give three hours of often combative testimony to a special committee that she deemed to be a political farce.

Senate Republicans created the committee to investigate “alleged and admitted” misconduct by Willis, whom they have been pursuing since her decision to indict Donald Trump and 18 alleged co-conspirators in the wake of the 2020 election.

The hearing featured questions about her use of public funds as Fulton County district attorney, whether she had coordinated with the administration of President Joe Biden, her handling of open records requests and her payment to a subscription service she used to track the value of the media coverage of her and her office.

It also featured Georgia’s last Democratic governor, Roy Barnes, as her attorney, who frequently interrupted to advise her not to answer questions.

Sen. Greg Dolezal, R-Cumming, led the committee in the place of Sen. Bill Cowsert, R-Athens, whom Dolezal said was recuperating from surgery.

When Barnes cut Dolezal off after dismissing the relevance of some of his questions, Dolezal said they were about the investigation while Barnes said they were merely to infer wrongdoing.

Willis then added, “also to divide the country.”

Each side accused the other of political grandstanding. Dolezal asked about a $10,000 a year subscription service that reported media coverage worth tens of millions of dollars, according to a projected slide of an email to Willis from her media relations staffer.

Dolezal also offered documents that indicated the same staffer had worked as a Democratic political consultant and that Willis had contributed to the political campaign of Charlie Bailey, now chairman of the state Democratic party, when he ran for lieutenant governor in 2022. (She pointed out that the money was for his primary campaign against another Democrat.)

Willis, in turn, had handed out photocopies of social media posts that showed both Dolezal, who is running for lieutenant governor, and Cowsert, who hopes to be attorney general, using the investigation for political messaging.

She repeatedly insulted Dolezal, telling him at one point that he had asked “a really ignorant question” about whether she had considered investigating Trump before his infamous phone call to Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger.

She also insulted the premise of the panel itself, calling it a “QAnon committee.” She said white senators were pursuing her because she is Black and she had indicted white and influential people. She said repeatedly that they wanted to be “daddy.”

After the hearing, Sen. Harold Jones II, D-Augusta, the Senate minority leader and a member of the committee, questioned the purpose, as well. He said Dolezal, who by committee rules was the only one besides Jones who got to ask questions, had simply reshaped old information about billing while raising “esoteric” questions about Willis’ handling of open records requests.

He said none of the questions got to the core issue of why Willis chose to indict. He said that was because the defendants had tried to overturn the election and she had done the right thing.

Although four defendants took plea deals, the rest avoided trial. Last month, Peter Skandalakis, executive director of the Prosecuting Attorneys’ Council of Georgia, asked a judge to dismiss the case and the judge agreed.

Merry Christmas to those who make Christmas happen

My mother used to torture my brother and I on Christmas morning. We'd wake up early in the morning, no matter what time the excitement of Christmas Eve had faded and we had finally fallen asleep. We didn't fall asleep, really, but passed out. My parents forbade us from entering the living room on Christmas morning until permission was granted. Long before the sun rose, I'd shout across the house until my parents were awake, not that hard of a task, because I grew up in a doublewide trailer. Even after they were up, I was not to set foot close to the loot left under the tree by Santa until a fire was burning in the fireplace, a fresh pot of coffee was brewed and most importantly, the camera was loaded with film. After what seemed like an eternity, I was beckoned to the living room. There were cheers and yells of joy and the triumphant brandishing of long-wished-for gifts, all captured for eternity by an Olympus point and shoot. When the flurry of excitement died down, my father would relinquish the camera and arm himself with pocket knife, screwdrivers and an assortment of batteries (all conveniently stashed arm's length from his favorite chair) and assist with opening packaging and boxes. Then my parents took a nap, while new toys and games were broken in. By midmorning, it was off to my grandparents for a Christmas feast, followed by the exchange of more gifts. The most wonderful time of the year comes with a lot of work; there's the decorating, the shopping, the wrapping and, ever-increasing in importance as I get older, the meal prep and cooking. A merry Christmas doesn't just fall out of the sky, it comes with a lot of stress and pressure on families, even if you like to keep things simple and in tune with the true reason of the season. It's something I didn't really appreciate until I had a family of my own and a proper share of Christmastime chores, and I'm happy to admit that the adult side of Christmas is just as enjoyable as the kid side. So, let's forget about Santa, the jolly fat man who gets more credit than he deserves, and here's to the ones that make Christmas happen: To the mothers who set a picture-perfect scene, even if they did it in October; to the grandmothers who host giant families and make sure everyone has their favorite meal; to the dads who stay up late putting bicycles and dollhouses together and install batteries in gadgets (and set up new phones, gaming systems and other electronic devices for the older kids); and let's not forget the grandpas just along for the ride and enjoying their second childhoods. Everyone has their place and an important job to do. However, you pass the festive days ahead, may it be with those you love and cherish and who help make Christmas happen.

DID YOU KNOW...?

Why was British money so confusing to the rest of the world before 1971?

By JACK BAGLEY
For Georgia Trust For Local News

When you see this column, it will be time to begin waving goodbye to 2025. I hope your Christmas was a wonderful one, and that you are planning a happy (but very safe) celebration for the incoming new year. Me? I'm going to bed early. I'm too old for all that celebrating stuff.

Next time we meet, the calendar will say it's 2026... for all of us, though, it's always trivia time. Here's the last column of the year, and I hope you like it! Happy New Year, everybody!

Did you know... ... the phrase "Waterloo Ivory" has a very dark history? After the battle of Waterloo in 1815 in Belgium, looters descended on the corpses of the fallen soldiers and began removing their teeth. The stolen teeth were later sold to dentists, who marketed them as denture sets called "Waterloo Ivory." The name was later used to refer to dentures made from the teeth of soldiers who died in the U.S. Civil War as well. (Ewwwwww.)

... you may know someone who practices xylography? Don't worry, it's not one of the mystic arts or anything – though it is an art. Xylography is the art of engraving wood, and the term is also used to describe early printing processes which involved text engraved on wooden blocks. (Remember those old woodburning kits you could get for kids? Try finding one of those now.)

... the first department store Santa Claus donned the red and black outfit in 1890? James Edgar (1843 - 1909), a department store owner in Brockton, Massachusetts, is believed to be the first person to dress up as Jolly Old St. Nick for a store. Edgar's Santa was based on the illustrations of Thomas Nast (1840-

British money was very confusing to the rest of the world until 1971/SPECIAL PHOTO

1902), who drew Santa in the guise we now know and love for Harper's Weekly in 1862. Edgar performed as Santa in his store annually and over the years, children from all over New England came by train to tell him what they wanted for Christmas. Today's modern department-store Santa can trace his lineage directly back to Edgar. (Ho, ho, ho, James Edgar!)

... native Hawaiian women use flowers to signal their romantic availability? If a woman native to Hawaii places a flower on her right ear, it means she's available. (If it's a big flower, it means she's not all that particular.)

... an Ecuadorian politician was elected president of the country five times? That's not the special part, however. José María Velasco Ibarra (1893-1979) was overthrown by the country's military forces four times. After the first two overthrows, when the military allowed democracy to return to Ecuador, Velasco Ibarra was elected president again. He only served out his complete term after his third election in 1952, and was overthrown after his fourth and fifth elections. (Somebody wasn't getting the message, it seems.)

... British money was very confusing until 1971? That year, the British currency was decimalized – made to work in factors of ten. The pound was still the main unit, and it was divided in 100 pence. But prior to 1971, British currency was, to other nations, most confusing, because it was based in factors of 12. The pound was the main unit, but it was divided into (in order of value, smallest to largest): the farthing, the half penny or ha'penny, the penny, threepence, sixpence, the shilling, the florin, the half-crown, and the crown. The farthing was worth ¼ penny, the half penny you can guess, same for threepence and sixpence, the shilling was worth 12 pence, the florin worth two shillings, a half crown was worth two shillings and sixpence, a crown was worth five shillings, or ¼ of a pound, and a pound was worth 240 pence. A pound could be in the form of a paper bill, called a note, or a gold coin, called a sovereign. If that isn't confusing enough to you, as a non-British subject, try these slang terms: a quid or a nicker, which were terms for a pound; bob, for a shilling; and a guinea, a gold coin worth 21 shillings. Guineas were more "gentlemanly" than shillings. (Makes sense to me!)

... a popular character on Sesame Street used to be a different color? Oscar the Grouch, the grumpy Muppet who lives in a trash can, is green. But at the beginning of the show, back in 1969, he was orange. There was no particular reason for Muppet creator Jim Henson (1936-1990) to change the character's fur color, but he did for the show's second season. On the show, Oscar explained the color change by saying he'd gone on vacation to the Swamp Mushy Muddy, and his color changed overnight. (Right.) ... one should always be careful of what one offers? Take, for example, the case of King Konrad III (1093-1154) of Franconia, a province of what is now Germany. When forces led by Konrad defeated the Saxons at Weibertreu Castle in 1140, Konrad granted the women of the castle free departure, allowing them to take whatever they could carry on their backs. The women of the castle chose to carry the men of the castle on their backs, and Konrad – admiring the ingenuity of the idea – kept his word. The men were supposed to have been either slaughtered or imprisoned, but they went free because Konrad was an honorable man. ... one of the most offbeat portraits of Queen Elizabeth II was created with tea bags? English artist Andy Brown (born 1980) created a portrait of Her Majesty (1926-2022) out of 1,000 used (and unused) tea bags stitched together on burlap for the Queen's Diamond Jubilee in 2012. The Queen was said to have been "bemused" by the offbeat portrait. Brown has also visited 90 baseball parks in nine countries to create paintings which capture the baseball experience. (Gives "tea time" a new meaning, eh?) Now... you know!

HERE'S A TIP!

By JOANN DERSON
King Features

* Cookies are so fun to make (and to eat). To save some of your favorites for the new year, simply place dough balls on a cookie sheet and freeze. Pop into a freezer-safe bag, and you can have freshly baked cookies pretty much anytime!

* Many people have heard of using apple-sauce in place of oil or fats, but here's one from T.L. in Georgia about a sugar replacement: "You can use pureed grapes in place of white sugar in some quick bread or muffin recipes. It's pretty easy to make in the blender, and all you need to do is adjust the dry ingredients a little bit so that your muffins are not too moist."

* "Wine. Nobody I know is wasting it. But if you're done before the bottle is, you can pour the leftover wine into ice cube trays to save it. You can use it later in recipes, or (my favorite) to chill a glass of wine!"

* If you have a lot of overnight guests, here is a good trick so that everybody can hang up his or her towel: Grab some S hooks from the shop and hang them off the towel bar. Now everyone can have a towel hook.

* I have two carafes that I use for my breakfast bar. In one I keep coffee and the other holds milk or cream. On holiday nights, I prep the cream carafe and put it in the fridge. In the morning, while the first pot of coffee is brewing, I fill the coffee carafe with hot water and let it sit. It keeps the coffee hot longer. Then guests may serve themselves some coffee while the next pot is brewing.

Do unto others ...

Editor's note: This column originally ran in the December 25, 2024 edition of the Tri-County Connector.

The pace picks up considerably from Thanksgiving to Christmas to New Years. There is much scurrying about amid the beckoning of the commercial savants who aspire to turn a generous profit during the holidays. Shopping reaches a peak during this time of the year. Parents shop for kids. Kids shop for parents. Executives purchase gifts for employees, and pupils shop for their teachers. At this time of the year, the greatest gifts are those which find their way to those less fortunate. All altruistic charities should be given the highest marks for trying to make the holidays memorable for those who need a lift materially and in spirit. Then there are special programs such as drives to collect coats for those without. More than likely, you have a couple of coats collecting dust in your closet. You could make someone smile by cleaning them up and putting them into a charity bin to be distributed to people who could stay warm from your charitable sensitivity. For most of us, it is difficult to think that there are those who don't have a meal confirmed for Christmas Day. Sadly, that sometimes is the case with many families.

LORAN SMITH

The local food bank works diligently to see that the needs of so many families are covered during the holidays. This organization works to make sure children don't go hungry—especially during the holiday season. Grocery chains do their part in supporting various charities. Then there are individuals who make annual contributions. If you don't have a favorite charity, there are plenty to choose from. Churches are sensitive to the needs of a community. They do their part to make sure that many families enjoy a "Merry Christmas." With inflation and other challenges to contend with, it is getting harder for these organizations to meet their goals. Nonetheless they soldier on and redouble their efforts to serve the most pressing need in our communities—full stomachs and happy holidays for needy families. Especially those who have young kids who know what it is like to go to bed hungry at night. Almost every Christmas, I recall the first day of school after the holidays. The teacher thought it would be interesting to let all the kids tell their classmates what they got for Christmas. Naturally, the affluent kids had the most impressive list to recite, which always brought about frustration. Fortunately, I was in the middle. I had a couple of items to boast about but it was always painful when the kids whose Christmas was limited always underscored that they got "lots and lots of fruit." The banker's daughter had the most impressive list and so did the kids of the leading businessmen in town. Why did the teachers not have the foresight to have each kid identify the one special gift they received from Santa? "Toys for Tots" has been great for the kids of our communities through the years. The Salvation Army has worked to fill so many voids. As you make plans for the holidays, give your family priority and remember to provide an assist for the churches and organizations that reach out to the many in need. At Christmas, I always appreciate that old poem which you hear from time to time: Christmas is coming, The geese are getting fat, Please put a penny in my old felt hat, If you don't have a penny, a half-penny will do, If you don't have a half-penny, God bless you.

Be a cheerful giver this holiday season. Smile as you move about and make somebody else smile during the forthcoming holiday season by extending a helping hand.

Stacey Abrams: Georgia showed us Medicaid work requirements don't work

For years, Republican lawmakers have pointed to Georgia's Medicaid work requirement experiment as proof that their approach "works." If you wanted to see what "reform" looked like, they said, look at Georgia. Now we know the dangers because the results are unmistakable: the purported solution was deeply inefficient and expensive and makes it harder — not easier — for people to get necessary care. A new nonpartisan Government Accountability Office report found that Georgia's Medicaid expansion work requirement program spent nearly twice as much on administrative costs as it spent on covering health care costs — with "over $54 million on bureaucracy versus $26 million on actual care costs," according to the report. Vendors made money, but desperate residents saw little in return. This Republican disaster has not only been a waste of money — it has also generated massive administrative barriers and red tape that have resulted in fewer than 10,000 enrollees out of almost 250,000 Georgians who qualify. Among those affected are the thousands of Georgia veterans, particularly in South Georgia, who do not qualify for TRICARE or VA health care but still deserve access to affordable medical treatment. Nearly 70,000 veterans in Georgia are uninsured — about 7.1% of the state's veteran population — which puts us in the Top 10 of states with uninsured vets. Kemp's Pathways program has proved to be an abject failure for those Georgians who served our country. From our veterans to working families, the barriers were predictable and illogical: confusing digital systems, understaffed agencies and endless documentation requirements that became a second job for many trying to comply. Georgia built a program so complex that the bureaucratic process became yet another obstacle, adding insult to injury. The program was designed to limit enrollment and neglect our communities — it has done just that, pulling necessary treatments away from our neighbors. Yet, despite Georgia's proven failure to meet minimum viable standards, Republican leaders in Washington, D.C., are preparing to make this model national. Instead of learning from Georgia's mistakes, they're doubling down on them. When the government breaks its promises and then breaks its own systems, the people pay the price. This national push to force people off of Medicaid through administrative burden comes at the worst possible moment. Key Affordable Care Act tax credits — subsidies that keep health care premiums affordable for millions — are set to expire if Congress fails to act. In states that expanded Medicaid, some people losing subsidies still have a safety net. As we well know, though, Georgia's Republican leaders have rejected Medicaid expansion for a decade — which means there's no backup plan. Families will face premium hikes with nowhere to turn, pushing more people to forgo critical care and face medical debt and financial crisis. This is not to mention the likely closure of more rural hospitals and urban safety net facilities. Among the highest risk closures are Flint River Community Hospital in Montezuma, Irwin County Hospital in Ocilla and Washington County Regional Medical Center in Sandersville. In other words: Georgia already refused the lifeline of Medicaid expansion, built a failed work requirement scheme that cost more and covered less, squandered millions on enriching vendors who constructed a broken system, and now sits at the center of a national health care crisis it helped create. This is not accidental mismanagement. It's an intentional design. When government systems are built to fail, people understandably lose faith that democracy can deliver at all. That erosion of trust is part of the strategy — because when voters become disengaged, the same leaders who broke the system stay in power. But the truth is simple: this can still be fixed. To start, Congress must renew the ACA tax credits, and every member of Congress that represents these areas should hear from you. This isn't about partisanship. It's about whether farmers can afford an accident or veterans will face health crises without help. Closer to home, leaders in Georgia must make Medicaid expansion their priority and demand actual efficiency versus the waste of money and abuse of power shown by the Pathways program. Across Georgia and the South, we must reject a nationalized health care punishment scheme that has already proven to be a boondoggle and an ineffective, bureaucratic maze — forcing working people to beg for scraps of respect. Democracy is supposed to deliver for people — helping bridge gaps created by systems that we can't cross alone. When it doesn't, we have to demand better — and vote accordingly. Georgia is both the warning and the opportunity. What happens next depends on all of us. Stacey Abrams is a best-selling author, entrepreneur and host of the podcast "Assembly Required." She previously served as minority leader in the Georgia House of Representatives.
