

Wreck on I-16 leaves one dead and several others injured

One person is dead and multiple others are injured following a multi-truck collision on I-16.

The Twiggs County Sheriff's Office says that around 8:45 a.m. on Friday, Jan. 23, a large dump truck carrying gravel struck the rear end of another vehicle, causing a domino effect of other crashes to follow.

A couple of accidents on the interstate that morning starting in Dublin led to slowed traffic before the incident.

According to a report from the Georgia State Patrol, the dump truck was following too closely and failed to stop, causing the collision. As a result of the impact, the struck vehicle - a semi truck carrying fruit trees - flipped over.

The flipped vehicle then struck a third vehicle, a yellow box truck hauling appliances, causing the box truck to strike a fourth vehicle hauling a dual-axle trailer.

As a result of the collision, the report says, the cab of the dump truck became detached, and the driver was later pronounced deceased at Atrium Health Navicent.

The driver of the semi truck, as a result of the vehicle being flipped on its side, became trapped in his truck. Emergency services arrived shortly after and were able to break through the windshield, allowing the driver to climb through and out of the flipped vehicle.

Officials say all parties were transported to the hospital for treatment.

Multiple emergency services agencies across Twiggs and Bleckley Counties responded to the scene as well as the Georgia State Patrol.

Because of the debris and active investigation, parts of I-16 East between mile markers 32 and 27, were closed off into the afternoon as debris was cleared.

Different dynamics emerge at Gordon council meeting

By CHRISTIAN MCKEARNEY
Staff Reporter

The first full meeting of the new-look Gordon City Council was tense at times, with Mayor Aprill Adside-Smith ultimately banging her gavel and calling the meeting to order.

The disagreement began when Kyle Swicord, sworn in earlier this month, made a motion to add an item to the agenda, one that revolved around going into executive session for a personnel issue.

"That's the one I told you to call me with clarity on it. But we can go into executive session about it. We can," Adside-Smith said. "I told you to call me personally. That's the thing - communication. I don't know why you all (new City Council members)... coming in, you all are not communicating with me."

Bleckley Co. BOE approves elected member positions

The Bleckley County Board of Education voted to re-elect Chair Shanna Evans and Vice-Chair Brandon Keel at a board meeting on Thursday, Jan. 15.

In addition to re-electing board officers, the board also elected board member Phillip Lester to serve as the legislative liaison, after being nominated by Chair Evans. The position was previously held by board member David Rojas.

All nominees were approved unanimously.

Where nominated, Evans and Lester abstained from voting respectively. Keel was not present for the meeting.

Following the position approvals, the meeting continued with a brief financial report.

According to Superintendent Dr. Trey Belflower, ESPLOST collections for December 2025 were up roughly $35,000 from December 2024, and up $17,000 from November 2025.

During a presentation, Belflower also revealed that even though the school year is a little over 50% of the way through, only about 47% of the budget had been expended.

The board also approved three personnel recommendations from Superintendent Belflower including adding Elizabeth "Libby" DeLoach to the 21st Century Community Learning Centers (CCLC) program's after school workers list, Callie Smith to the substitute teachers list and Jadyn Tarpley to the after school workers list.

Ice storm dodged, but cold weather remains persistent

By CHRISTIAN MCKEARNEY

There was plenty of rain on Sunday.

The Cooperative Extension Office in Jeffersonville actually recorded 1.3 inches, which was the second-highest rainfall total in the last six months.

For the most part though, the frozen stuff stayed away, and this part of Georgia didn't suffer the same fate as northern parts of the state, where the roads were touch-and-go, as were the power grids.

Nevertheless, the cold persisted. The low temperature at the Jeffersonville station on Monday was 25.7 degrees. The forecast originally called for the low temperature to be closer to the teens, although that didn't end up happening. Only six times in the last five has the station in Jeffersonville recorded a low temperature in the teens.

Jeffersonville Elementary School mourns loss of beloved Twiggs Co. school teacher

By CAROLINE WEATHERSBY
Staff Reporter

Twiggs County is mourning the loss of beloved school teacher, Ms. Michelle Rene Capece, after she passed away earlier this month.

Representatives say she passed away suddenly on Tuesday, Jan. 6.

Capece worked for the Twiggs County public school system for 24 years. She was a well-loved science teacher at Jeffersonville Elementary School, a BETA club advisor, a regular attendee of school athletic events and a treasured mentor.

Capece was recently awarded Jeffersonville Elementary's Teacher of The Year for the 2025-2026 school year.

A celebration of life service was held for Capece on Jan. 11 at the JES gymnasium with speeches from friends and family and performances from the school chorus and drumline.

Capece was born on Oct. 25, 1965 in Augsburg, Germany to Jonathan B. Capece and Judy G. Capece. Born to a military family, the Capeces moved around, eventually finding their way to Millen, Georgia, where she grew up.

Capece graduated from Jenkins County High School.

An excerpt from her obituary read: "Education was not just a profession for Michelle; it was a calling. With a passion for teaching and an unwavering commitment to students, she dedicated her life to shaping young minds, encouraging curiosity, and instilling confidence. Whether in the classroom, mentoring one-on-one, or advocating for educational excellence, Michelle believed that every student has potential worth nurturing."

Beyond education, Michelle was known for a warm spirit, thoughtful conversation, and a genuine love for people. She carried the world with her stories, wisdom, and compassion.

Michelle leaves behind cherished memories with family, friends, colleagues, and countless students whose lives were changed because she cared enough to teach, guide and believe."

On Jan. 8, fifth graders at Jeffersonville Elementary School wore red in Capece's memory. JES representatives shared the photos on social media.

Adside-Smith then added that "only two members" of the council are responding to her emails.

"Nobody but two are responding back to me. There's no communication. I mean, when are we gonna cut this?" the mayor said.

Councilman Cliff Worthy then "seconded" Swicord's motion.

"I'm speaking," Adside-Smith said. "You can hold that thought."

Adside-Smith eventually banged her gavel, saying "I've never had to do this."

Responded Worthy: "Feel better now?"

The Gordon City Council certainly has a different dynamic now. Swicord and George Wynn, each sworn in earlier this month, didn't support Adside-Smith in last year's mayoral race. Two other council members – Cliff Worthy and Dawn Beck – have been on the council for the last two years and haven't always seen eye-to-eye with the mayor. This only leaves Adside-Smith with two council members who are more accommodating – Tony Powell and Harold Whipple.

This was highlighted when Powell made a motion to appoint Whipple as mayor pro tem. Powell and Whipple are the two African-American council members. That vote failed, however, and the council then voted to appoint Wynn as the mayor pro tem by a 4-2 count. The mayor pro tem's primary duty is to fill in for the mayor when the mayor is unavailable.

Also during the meeting, the following committee appointments were approved unanimously:

- MainStreet Gordon - Worthy
- Public Safety and Fire Department – Wynn
- Sanitation - Beck
- Streets - Whipple
- Finance - Powell
- Water and Sewer – Whipple
- Capital Projects – Swicord

A WILD HIGH SCHOOL REUNION - There are often high school reunions far, far from home. They come to weddings, funerals, and meetings. When Sgt. Howard H. Hill, Sgt. Edward C. Maddox, Corp. John S. Bagganly, and PFC Earl F. Sims met on the 4th of July 1948; they were astonished. The four graduates of Danville, Georgia High School met far, far away at Yokota Air Force Base, some fifty miles away from Tokyo, Japan. Atlanta Journal, July 5, 1948.

HE IS A HUMAN BEING - In Middle Georgia during the early decades of the 20th Century, a newspaper reader would not normally read stories like this one. When it came to stories of black and white people, they were stories of lynching, killing, and other unspeakable acts. This story is an exception to the rule and, more importantly, more common than one might think.

The story begins on Big Sandy Creek near Danville, Georgia. On May 9, 1933, a black farm worker fell into a swollen stream. One, twice, and then three times the drowning man went down into the freshet. On the banks of the creek stood State Representative Allen W. Daughtry.

Daughtry knew the victim and was not just going to stand by and watch the impending tragedy. Rep. Daughtry dove into the rushing waters. The third time, as they say, "was the charm." Daughtry brought the man up. Daughtry's farm foreman, Ben F. Holton, aided the rescuer and rescuee to the creek bank. Atlanta Constitution, May 10, 1933.

A NOBLE LIEUTENANT - Lt. George J. Nobles, Jr. was a member of the ubiquitous Nobles family of Danville, Ga., and Twiggs County, Ga. During World War II in Italy, Lt. Nobles found himself in a brutal combat battle. Nobles led his men through an intense barrage as they crawled toward a bridge to cross a river. Several men were wounded. The lieutenant came to the aid of as many of his men as he could. Nobles continued to push his command across an icy bridge in the face of intense machine gun fire. During the battle, Lt. Nobles was seriously wounded and taken from the battlefield. For his distinguished and conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of life above and beyond the call of duty while engaged in action against an enemy of the United States was awarded the Silver Star, the nation's third-highest medal for heroism. Atlanta Constitution, August 13, 1944.

THE QUEEN OF QUILT - Jeffersonville's "Aunt" Mary Liza Hand loved quilting more than freezing sleeper loves quilts. Mrs. Hand started at a young age. In 1919, Mary Liza lost more than 150 homemade and hand-pierced quilts when her home burned. With only fifteen quilts, stored in a bedroom, in Christmas of 1938, Mrs. Hand had built her inventory back to the 150 level. Oh, by the way, "Aunt" Mary Liza Hand was seventy years old and not ready to stop. The Atlanta Constitution, January 19, 1939.

COOKIE TO THE RESCUE - The battle of Anzio, Italy, was no easy wade into the shorelines of Italy. One Jeffersonville man, Armour Floyd, Cook Second Class, United States Navy, jumped into action. When fires started aboard Floyd's ship, the U.S.S. Plunkett, it was Floyd who abandoned his post in the galley and ran through the blazing infernos caused by intense enemy fire. Floyd's gallantry was cited by the Navy in the face of grave peril, and his tenacious devotion to duty was in keeping with the highest traditions of the Naval Service. In addition to being a kitchen cook, Floyd's commendation was a somewhat rare commendation for an African - American naval cook during World War II. Macon Telegraph, July 18, 1944.

THE FOUR COUNTY BANK - On the 16th of September 1941, a new bank opened in Allentown, named the Four County Bank. The new bank was designed to serve four counties: Laurens, Wilkinson, Twiggs, and Bleckley. At the time, there was no bank between Dudley and Macon. A.W. Daughtry was the first president, aided by vice-president, T.E. Lee. The Board of Directors was composed of Hembree Carroll, Assistant Cashier, Homer Chance, director, Grady Toney, director, and A.T. Land, director. Macon Telegraph, Sept. 16, 1941.

Georgia First Bank
named Newsweek's
America's Best
Regional Banks of 2026

SPECIAL TO THE TIMES JOURNAL POST

Georgia First Bank has been named one of Newsweek's America's Best Regional Banks of 2026, an honor recognizing the bank's impact and commitment to financial strength, community investment, and reliable access to everyday banking services.

Georgia First Bank is a locally owned community bank serving Middle Georgia, committed to strong capital, responsible lending, and long-term relationships with the individuals, families, and businesses in the communities it has served for generations.

The recognition, presented by Newsweek in partnership with Plant-A Insights Group, highlights financial institutions that are powering local economies by supporting small businesses, financing community projects, and providing dependable banking services.

"This recognition reflects the strength of our foundation and the consistency of our commitment to the communities we serve," said Maury Beasley, President and CEO of Georgia First Bank. "We believe responsible banking, healthy capital, and local decision-making are essential to long-term success for our customers and for the communities that depend on us."

"We hope this list helps people find the most trusted financial institutions in their area – whether they're planning their next business venture or taking the next step toward financial security," said Jennifer H. Cunningham, Editor-in-Chief of Newsweek.

About Georgia First Bank

OFTC Practical Nursing Program
achieves 100 percent NCLEX pass rate

SPECIAL TO THE TIMES JOURNAL POST

OFTC – Oconee Fall Line Technical College's (OFTC) Practical Nursing (PN) program recently garnered a 100% first-time pass rate for OFTC PN graduates who tested during the 2025 calendar year.

This perfect pass rate means all graduates are now eligible for licensure as Licensed Practical Nurses (LPNs), a major milestone on their journey into healthcare.

"We are extremely proud to celebrate the outstanding success of our 2025 Practical Nursing graduates," shared Jodi Warren, OFTC's Director of Nursing. "Achieving a 100% first-time pass rate reflects the quality of our program and the dedication, commitment, and hard work of both our students and faculty."

Throughout the program, OFTC nursing instructors provide students with the tools and support needed to succeed—incorporating NCLEX-style practice exams, Assessment Technologies Institute (ATI) resources, and hands-on training to prepare them to be successful on the licensure exam.

With the NCLEX-PN behind them, many graduates are now stepping into roles as LPNs across the region and preparing to further their education through OFTC's Associate Degree in Nursing (ADN) Bridge Program—a pathway to becoming Registered Nurses.

DID YOU KNOW...?

Did you know being a hoarder could potentially be fatal?

By JACK BAGLEY
 Georgia Trust For Local News

Did you know...
 ... a popular children’s poet wrote a big hit song? Shel Silverstein (1930-1999), famous for children’s poetry and books such as Where the Sidewalk Ends, wrote the classic country-western song “A Boy Named Sue,” which became a hit for singer Johnny Cash (1932-2003). Cash first heard the song when Silverstein sang it for him at a party at Cash’s home in Hendersonville, Tennessee, in 1969.
 ... raw kidney beans can poison you? Raw kidney beans contain a chemical called phytohaemagglutinin (no, I do not know how to pronounce it). This chemical can cause vomiting and headaches after just a small handful of raw beans have been ingested. Cooking the beans removes the chemical from them. (Thankfully.)
 ... hoarding can be fatal? Just ask the brothers Homer (1881-1947) and Langley Collyer (1885-1947). The Collyer brothers were rather odd residents of New York City, and following the death of their mother they lived in seclusion in their family home. The two men obsessively collected books, furniture, musical instruments, and just about anything else. The collection became an obsession, and soon their three-story home was crammed from floors to ceilings with junk. Passages were carved through the stuff to enable the men to move around, and – fearing someone would break in and steal their possessions – the two created elaborate booby traps in the junk. After Homer went blind and became paralyzed, Langley dedicated himself to taking care of his older sibling. In late March of 1947, though, neighbors called Police to investigate a foul smell coming from the home. After finally breaking in through an upstairs window, Police found the body of Homer Collyer. He had died of starvation. But that wasn’t the source of the smell; further digging through the incredibly crammed interior of the house finally led to the origin of the aroma – the discovery of Langley Collyer’s body, about 10 feet from where Homer had been discovered a few weeks before. Langley had been crushed by one of the booby traps set in the junk about three weeks before Homer died. He was unable to bring the paralyzed Homer any food, and Homer starved.
 ... tennis players are not allowed to swear if they’re playing at Wimbledon? The fact that many players come from countries where English is not the primary language isn’t an issue, either – line judges have to learn curse words in all of the languages spoken by the participants, so nobody can get away with breaking that rule. (Well, darn.)
 ... a Star Wars actor accepted his role only after an odd request was granted? Samuel L. Jackson (born 1948) accepted the role of Jedi master Mace Windu in The Phantom Menace only after he was allowed to wield a purple lightsaber. Producer George Lucas (born 1944) agreed after Jackson said he wanted to be able to find himself in large battle scenes, and having a purple lightsaber would make that easier. (A noble request, if you ask me.)
 ... fourteen punctuation marks are used in English? They are, in no particular order: the period, comma, colon, semi-colon, dash, hyphen, apostrophe, question mark, exclamation point, quotation marks, brackets, parenthesis, brace, and ellipsis. None of them were routinely used in writing or printing before the 15th Century. (Which makes reading from that time difficult.)
 ... a huge festival dedicated to beer is held each year in the United States? The Great American Beer Festival is held annually in Denver, Colorado, in September. It offers the largest collection of U.S. beer ever served. (That might be fun to watch!)
 ... on Mars, sunsets are blue? Light from the Sun is scattered in a planet’s atmosphere based on what’s floating around in that atmosphere. On Earth, the many different molecules of dust cause the sunset to appear red. But on Mars, the dust is primarily made of iron oxide, and that causes the sunset to appear blue.
 ... former President Jimmy Carter (1924-2024) was a speed reader? Carter could read at a rate of 2000 words per minute, and retained most of what he read. (That’s fast!)
Now... you know!

Can I get a hand, please?

I lost my wedding ring several years ago.
 I blame the pandemic.
 Back in the days of shutdowns and social distancing, I was sitting in the driver’s seat of my beautiful car when, having just interacted with someone outside my family circle, I reached for the heavily recommended hand sanitizer. At the time a bottle of this clear, often scented goop was like money in the bank. Everyone desired it, but only a few could find it on store shelves.
 To properly clean my hands, I removed my wedding band and set it aside. After rubbing alcohol into my skin, I reached for the symbol of wedding vows. My still damp fingers failed to grasp the tungsten carbide; thus it slipped and fell into the recesses between the seats.
 And there it remains to this day.
 I’m beginning to think there is a black hole to the darkest depths of the universe on my Honda’s floorboards, because several things have been lost down there over the years, and no expedition or treasure hunt has ever been able to recover anything of value. I have found half-eaten crackers and broken crayons aplenty, but never my lost jewelry. A bounty still stands on the lost item. I told my children that whoever recovers and returns the ring will be entitled to a $20 bill.
 Still nothing.
 The problem is that there are so many dark crevices along the seats that no amount of light can shine in every corner, and even if it could, the human hand is not dexterous enough to reach in every hole. My ring, most likely, will go to whomever I sell my car to whenever I decide to finally upgrade. We can just keep that between us. I have started wearing cheap rubber wedding bands, so it’s no big deal if I make a habit of dropping things.
 The solution to my problem, though, is currently being developed by a team of scientists in Sweden. Researchers are developing a robotic hand that will surpass the functionality of a biological one. What’s the problem with hands? A real one can only pick up one or two things at a time. This machine one, however, can maneuver and grasp multiple items at one time, with each finger operating semi-independently of others and bending in all kinds of ways our meat-and-bone phalanges cannot.

 Furthermore, the hand is detachable from the host and can crawl around, much like the Thing in the Addams Family franchise. The implications of such a device are phenomenal.
 Besides benefitting the injured or handicapped, the robot hand could be the perfect tool for working in tight and/or dangerous spaces. From retrieving a dropped screw in ductwork to repairing industrial machines, this thing could make life easier for a whole lot of people.
 All I want to know is, can I borrow one for a little while? I want it to root around under the seats of my car and see if it can find my wedding ring.
 There’s $20 in it if it can.

"Die, My Love" (R)
 Whether you're a fan of twisty psychological films or not, this film is just a treat for millennials and Gen-Zers who grew up watching Robert Pattinson in the "Twilight" films and Jennifer Lawrence in "The Hunger Games" films. Playing love interests opposite each other, Pattinson and Lawrence respectively portray young couple Jackson and Grace right after they move to Montana from New York. The audience soon learns that Grace is pregnant with their first child, but after Grace gives birth, the film is told from Grace's fragmented and distorted point of view as she slowly descends into madness due to the stress of becoming a mother. It is chock-full of tough-to-watch, unforgettable emotional moments that remind us why Lawrence is one of the greatest of her generation. Out now. (MUBI)
"His & Hers" (TV-MA)
 Netflix has got the formula down on how to crank out series after series that still leave viewers on the edge of their seats. This new mystery-thriller series starring Jon Bernthal ("The Amateur") and Tessa Thompson ("Hedda") is only six episodes long, but with its two talented leads and a small-town setting, it's already become popular on the streaming service. Thompson plays reporter Anna Andrews, who returns to her old hometown of Dahlonega, Georgia, to investigate a murder. While there, she bumps into her estranged husband, Detective Jack Harper (Bernthal), who has been assigned to the case himself. (What a coincidence!) No doubt that the spouses' suspicions of each other will escalate the tension to another level! Out now. (Netflix)

"The Wrecking Crew" (R)
 Any movie that is led by both Jason Momoa ("A Minecraft Movie") and Dave Bautista ("Trap House") is sure to be a testosterone-filled action flick with goofy moments in between to keep audiences shouting at their screens for more. Momoa and Bautista play two half-brothers: Jonny (Momoa), a "loose cannon cop," and James (Bautista), a "disciplined Navy SEAL." After their father is murdered in a suspicious hit-and-run in Hawaii, the brothers team up to figure out the root of the murder and keep the rest of their family from also being threatened. "The Wrecking Crew" premieres on Jan. 28. (Amazon Prime Video)

"Chestnut" (NR)
 This drama film features Natalia Dyer in a much different tone than how we are used to seeing her as Nancy Wheeler in "Stranger Things." She plays Annie, a shy aspiring writer who is stuck in Philadelphia after graduating from college; however, at the end of the summer, a move to Los Angeles awaits her. In the weeks up until then, Annie meets a pair of best friends -- wild child Tyler (Rachel Keller) and the mysteriously sweet Danny (Danny Ramirez) -- and begins spending all her nights with the charming duo. When she suddenly finds herself with confusing feelings for both Tyler and Danny, Annie wonders whether she's subtly being told by the universe to stay in Philly or to run as fast as she can to L.A. Foreward

Over the years, I have been fortunate enough to travel from my humble beginnings on a farm in middle Georgia to far-away places like Italy and France – and I maintain that it is virtually impossible to have a bad meal at either locale.

A village in France that has no stop light or stop sign will certainly have a restaurant that will offer a tasty meal paired with an inviting local wine – modest, perhaps, but certainly uplifting to the palate and the stomach. If you find yourself at a family restaurant in Italy, you may get the family’s own unlabeled wine from their backyard vineyard to go with the best pasta you ever tasted.

In the U.S., regional influences have long prevailed. It only makes sense that with Vermont’s signature maple syrup that there would be a public boast from some restaurant that it makes the “World’s Greatest Pancakes.”

And it seems that the truism “necessity is the mother of invention” can most aptly be applied to the unlikely combination known as shrimp and grits. The impoverished people of our coastal communities gave us that glorious dish. Shrimp from the sea didn’t cost anything and it was easy to obtain cornmeal, which was dirt cheap. As a result, we have a meal that in the big city costs an up-scale diner more than the poor families made in a week.

Then there is that thing called barbecue not the grill, but the meat the grill creates. No food has more regional influences than this popular mealtime item, which can be pork or beef or, if you are in Montana, mountain oysters. Rest easy I’ll leave it at that.

Those who cook barbecue usually experiment, and some never stop.

The sauces and the rubs make a difference with many BBQ aficionados.

Some recipes are handed down, and some purveyors listen to the suggestions of friends, neighbors, and customers. The taste test usually dictates the ratings of a “BBQ joint.”

There is an art to cooking barbecue, and no one has the market cornered – yet there are many who swear by those who cook barbecue for a living. You could have two BBQ joints side by side, both with different menus, and half the people will swear by one while never darkening the door of the other.

Our neighbors Bree and Richard Hayes have just written a book about dining establishments that have received their blessing as the best barbecue places in and around Athens, the home of the University of Georgia and the tailgatin’ Bulldogs. They agreed that they would only research and write about the best barbecue restaurants within 30 minutes of their home on Milledge Circle in the Five Points section of Athens.

Their research is very good, but would you expect anything less from two college professors with PhDs?

LORAN SMITH

Many pros like to eat and to experiment with food – include this couple in that category. Bree grew up in Maryland, near Washington, learning to cook from Southern family members.

Richard, whose birthplace was Boston, acquired a taste for Southern cuisine, with BBQ often trumping all other dishes. He’s now a bona fide expert, with his favorite savory recipes dancing around in his head alongside his psychology counseling expertise that has brought him academic acclaim.

When Richard and Bree

settled in Athens, lunch was often a matter of convenience. For Richard, grabbing a pulled-pork sandwich at Springhouse on Broad Street resulted in him becoming a connoisseur. Now he is a “Damn Good Dawg” who can make a “damn good plate” of barbecue, which he often does for family and friends, resulting in nothing but rave reviews.

Then there are Bree’s side dishes: Brunswick stew, cole slaw, collards, and mac and cheese. And if you want dessert, then she has a banana cake that would bowl over Paula Deen. If that doesn’t make the Hayeses as Southern as Lewis Grizzard or John T. Edge, then take note of Richard padding around the house in his bare feet.

“Food has the greatest social connection,” says Richard Lewis, who with his partner Susan DeRose owns Bones Restaurant, a famous steak house in Atlanta. “Food keeps people connected, which is important for society.”

That is why barbecue

and country music is a near-perfect pairing.

John Currence, chef-owner of the popular City Grocery in Oxford, Mississippi, and winner of the James Beard Award in 2009 for the category “Best Chef, South,” says this: “Barbecue is, like football, religion in the South. For every region there is a variety of its own, and the people of that region stand proudly behind their ‘Q’ because in their minds, nothing else measures up. Simply put, it is a study in ethnocentricity. Barbecue is a way of life for us.”

John T. Edge, host of the popular network TV show “TrueSouth” and perhaps the best-known food expert with a firsthand knowledge of food, and especially barbecue, says that “Barbecue is a vestige of our rural and agricultural past, still blowing smoke in the present.”

Travel the BBQ trail blazed by Richard and Bree Hayes in their excellent book, and you will likely conclude that you have been not just filled but fulfilled.

In politics, process is now power

A former Georgia House Majority Leader once told his caucus “Never confuse what you do when campaigning with what you (have to) do when governing.” There is some wisdom in this statement. What voters demand they be told in order for candidates to be elected and re-elected is often very different from the hard choices that must be made when governing.

This is not to feed a trope that says “politicians always say one thing and do another.”

It’s instead to demonstrate that slogans and actions now live in almost parallel universes, where campaigns are centered on feelings. It’s the job of those elected to channel these vibes into actual policies.

Campaigns are designed to show you, the voters, how you will be winners. The missing details would show tradeoffs – what must be given up in order to get something. In campaigns these details become lines of attack for the opposition. Good policy can often die due to a bad campaign.

The Georgia General Assembly is now officially in the process of governing. The one constitutional requirement is that they deliver a balanced budget to the governor at the end of their session. Anything else they choose to tackle is up to them.

The process of campaigns is also ongoing. Many of the state’s top positions are without incumbents. Qualifying officially occurs the first week of March, inside the Capitol.

The first week of March also contains “Crossover Day,” the deadline for a bill to pass either chamber for it to be considered by the other this year. As such, the politics of campaigning now marches side by side with the politics of governing. Broad and purposely vague slogans will meet those details that not only will determine spending and policy for this year, but will set up the base spending scenarios for those soon to be elected.

Despite campaign influences, the governing process remains the same. In the middle of this mix, the power subtly shifts.

Governor Brian Kemp holds line-item veto power, lest any legislator get the idea that he’s irrelevant in this process. And yet, the final accountability for the finished product will lay at the feet of those who remain in office next year.

Lieutenant Governor Burt Jones hopes to hold that veto pen next year, while presiding over the Senate chamber this year. Central to his campaign is a plan to eliminate the state’s income tax over time, with the first step to exempt each individual’s first $50,000 of income from taxation. A lot of the details of where the spending would be cut or what other revenues would be raised and from whom would presumably come once Jones has the Governor’s mansion – and the power of the veto pen.

House Speaker Jon Burns, meanwhile, wants to eliminate property taxes for Georgia’s homeowners. This comes from growing frustrations with local governments who both collect and spend property tax revenues, and have allowed rising real estate prices to grow their tax collections and local spending.

CHARLIE HARPER

The details for either plan will eventually have to come out in the state’s budget. Each Appropriations Chairman will work with his committees to arrive not only at a budget for this year, but with eyes looking through to next year’s challenges and changes, and beyond.

The Senate Budget Chairman responsible for reconciling these pledges into details is Blake Tillery of Vidalia. He, too, is running for a different office. By anecdotal accounts and the sparse public polling available, he seems to be doing well in the crowded field to replace Jones as the Lieutenant Governor. He also chaired the LG’s committee on how to eliminate the state income tax.

There is no policy daylight between the lieutenant governor who would be governor and the Appropriations Chairman who would replace him on the issue of phasing out the income tax. Both are charting their political futures on it, with the power of their current office part of the institutional process to help get them there.

There is always risk in future elections of who holds power now versus who might in the future. The other side of this risk coin is the House Appropriations Chairman, Matt Hatchett of Dublin. Given the high likelihood that Republicans will retain control of the legislature after the elections, he’s the most certain of those in the budget process to be in the same seat – and to wield the same power.

Those campaigning for statewide office will get the most headlines, and they should.

Within the Capitol, however, stability and certainty are currency. Both Appropriations chairmen hold an outsized amount of power and influence over the entire legislative process that extends well beyond the budget.

Chairman Tillery has a decent chance to direct not just the budget but the entire senate next year. In the Capitol’s power players, that gives him currency now with an upside option for the future.

When it comes to landing the plane with details this year and next, however, don’t sleep on Matt Hatchett. He’s the one who must internalize that this year’s details will become next year’s problems or opportunities.

His peers know he’ll be acting today for the starting point they will begin with this time next year, under new leadership with new goals and agendas. They understand and value this stability in a season of change. That directly equates to even more political power.

There is not much peaceful about the Nobel Peace Prize right now

Well, one thing you can say for sure, I am in good company. It looks like I’m not the only one that got hosed by the Nobel Committee. It seems the president of the U.S. of A. was also passed over for the Nobel Peace Prize even though he said he had stopped eight wars. (It might have been nine, but as of this writing, Minnesota has not surrendered.)

The Nobelians gave the 2025 Peace Prize to Venezuelan opposition leader María Corina Machado, who turned around and gave it to Donald Trump. I was hoping the guy in Hungary with the unpronounceable name who got my much-deserved Nobel Prize for Literature would get the hint and give me his, but that hasn’t happened. I guess when you are Leader of the Free World, you can expect this kind of thing. Not me. I guess I will just have to settle for continuing to be a modest yet much-beloved columnist who bears a striking resemblance to a young Brad Pitt. Life can be unfair.

The Nobel Committee said Machado could give it to Clarabell the Clown for all they cared. She was and always would be listed as having won the Peace Prize, not Trump. I don’t think that sat well with the president.

He had already told the Nobel Committee he deserved the Peace Prize. He should have talked to me first. That is not the way to get it. That will sull up folks real quick. In my corporate life, if someone told you they were going to be president of the company one day, the rest of us who knew we wouldn’t be would make sure he wouldn’t be, either. I have the feeling the committee felt the same way.

In fairness to His Eminence, Barack Obama got the thing after having been in office less than eight months and for no good reason. He hadn’t stopped eight wars. He hadn’t even found the White House dining room. The Nobel Committee said he had made “extraordinary efforts to strengthen international diplomacy and cooperation between peoples.” Oh, please. He should have been embarrassed and told them to give it to somebody more worthy – like Clarabell the Clown.

In what I would deem a rather unpeaceful gesture, Trump ripped into Norway’s Prime Minister Jonas Gahr Støre because his country “decided not to give me the Nobel Peace Prize for having stopped 8 Wars PLUS.” (The PLUS is a new development I wasn’t aware of. Maybe Minnesota has surrendered.)

In his reply to Trump, Støre explained that an independent committee, not the government of Norway, awards the prize. Meaning don’t blame him anymore than he would blame the United States for not giving Norway’s Kristofer Hivju an Academy Award for his role as Connor Rhodes in “The Fate of the Furious,” not to mention a groundbreaking performance as Tormund Giantsbane in “Game of Thrones.”

In the same message to the Norwegian prime minister, Trump insisted the US needed “Complete and Total Control of Greenland.” I’m not sure what Herr Støre’s response was, but I expect it was “Go for it, kompis. That’s Denmark’s problem, not mine. Just keep your henders off Austvågøya, Vestvågøya, Moskenesøya and our other 238,997 islands.”

I’m not sure what good

it did to threaten Norway over Greenland, which is an autonomous territory of Denmark. Why not threaten Iceland or Sweden or – say – even Denmark?

I am admittedly not in the loop on this, but maybe we could work out a swap. Give us Greenland and we will give you Vermont – but you’ll have to take Bernie Sanders, too. On second thought, that could be a deal breaker.

I will leave the heavy lifting to Mr. Trump on this one. As for me, maybe I need to threaten the guy in Hungary with the unpronounceable name who got my much-deserved Nobel Prize for literature. Either I get what is rightfully mine or I will give it to Clarabell the Clown. It’s all a circus, anyway.
